PRIDE BURSTS FORTH

There exists on American campuses a sentiment, appropriately labeled Cynicism, which establishes a gigantic barrier between the student and mature rational judgments.

It is this Cynicism which motivates a campus consensus of bad food unfair policies and general disgust, but which is shown to be merely so-much-talk as the dormitories are reoccupied and students begin another semester after a long vacation. It is a truly fantastic achievement that receives the applause of all but a few students; one that seldom occurs but can be expected to, at various times.

The St. Michael's Student Center is one such achievement. Its completion and operation were received with jubilation and surprise. Although those of the Cynical tradition groped for a target for their militant assaults, the Student Center withstood their painful inspection and passes a test comparable to none. It was recognized as a truly enormous success.

The students of St. Michael's were pleased! They had now a brand new feeling of pride in the College. A building had been erected for their use and as if a new toy had been unwrapped. Alliot Hall became, in an actual sense, a Student Center.

The Snack Bar, with its captain's chairs, did a booming business, as did the Book Store. Michaelmen jammed the Game Room, TV Room and the lounges as if they had inherited a new home.

Yes, Cynicism never had a chance. Another link in the chain to a better St. Michael's had been snapped shut. Because it was received well, the Student Center has established a certain pride which will manifest itself in behavior and appearance.

THE STIMULUS

by Nicholas Cioffi

Have you noticed the marked change in the attitude of the student since returning from the Christmas vation?

It seems that the students have become a little more civil since their return. The "rowdy-ness" which accompanied the meals seems to have left the souls of our esteemed students (or maybe it is the acoustic ceiling). No longer do the "meal-lines" buckle and bulge under the strain of childish emotions. We are waiting in line longer now than when we ate in the "white-house" and yet there seems to be less complaining.

The minority of students that still adhere to childish policies will soon be assimilated by the new majority of mature students. Those who persist in remaining fools will become social outcasts. No longer will the "loud-mouth" be laughed at; his days are buried in the bricks of the Student Union.

It is rather doubtful that Alliot Hall is the sole cause of this metamorphosis. It would seem that Alliot Hall served as the frosting on the cake which has been in preparation for many years.

But all this concerns the attitude of social poise and not academics. How do we adjust the academic attitude of the student to compliment this newly acquired social attitude?

MODERATOR. MR. JOHN DONOGHUE

A PROTESTING PROTESTANT

by RAY LE ROUX

During the last vacation, which I think died a rather premature death, I had the opportunity of attending a lecture given at Skidmore College in Saratoga Springs, New York, Dr. Paul Tillich, an independent theologian, who nevertheless must rank as one of the great minds in the western world today, spoke.

Dr. Tillich, a German expatriate, taught for 30 years at Union Theological Seminary and more recently has been employed at the Ivy League School for Cabinet members and Political Appointees (Harvard) as the Chair of University Professor. He is the author of many books, "THE COURAGE TO BE" and "THE SYSMATIC THEOLOGY" among others.

A small, almost insignificant, seventyish man, who looks like a New Haven lawyer rather than an eminant intellectual philosopher, Dr. Tillich spoke in a very mild tone with a heavy German accent. To me, this mildness (I fear that it was 'put on') seemed incongruous with the brilliance of the message which only a Fulton Sheen delivery could capably exploit. but I feel that this mildness is complusory to those Christians who must please sundry and diverse sects having no central unity such as we have in the Church. I almost felt that Dr. Tillich felt this too.

I must apoligize for having lost the general outline of the lecture as it was my first exposure to Protestantism and I felt more inclined to note those points which I suspect would be interesting to the readers of the MICHAELMEN.

He defined faith as ultimate concern rather than willful belief.

In speaking about health, this being his general topic, he noted that it enhances all dimensions of man WHO IS A UNITY and that it and its opposite, disease, must be existential concepts.

Our novels, motion pictures and plays, according to Dr. Tillich, are intrinsically influenced by existentialism and psycho-therapy and, as such, are merely a confirmation of the interdependency between existential and psycho-therapeutic concepts.

G.E. Reed, Jr.

In regard to philosophy for college freshmen, our class of 1964 will be glad to note that they have a champion defender in Dr. Tillich, who would replace the awe-inspiring concepts of philosophy with guided self-conversation.

He felt that the age of analysis without synthesis, in which we live, has in general lost its unity and hence we live in a distorted world.

I was sitting in the local people's section of the hall and I noticed that the gentleman sitting in front of me was our own local, most-of-the-time professional Rotarian and follower of Charles Goren, and some-of-the-time Protestant minister, whose most famous line is "and please call me Father".

This same gentleman began to shudder when the eminent speaker very meekly suggested that ministers and clergy in general might even awaken questions to those undisturbed in religious tradition in order that progress might be made.

Mr. Burke of the philosophy department will be glad to hear that the same Dr. Tillich considers man not a geometric placement of parts nor a composite of several different levels of being but rather as a unity, multi-dimensional though he may be. Actually, this article must be placed upon the shoulders of Mr. Burke. It was He who first ranked Dr. Tillich in our minds as a brilliant philosopher who, although he is a Protestant, is close to the doctrines of Saint Thomas Aquinas.

When talking on the subject of drugs, he said that particular healing might provoke sickness in other areas and that man's health must be regarded as an entire unit. More specifically, he wondered whether the use of drugs were morally legal if a nervous conscience became attested or immorality preserved as a direct result of the use of drugs.

Once more I must apologize to the reader because Dr. Tillich at this point became very, very abstract in his discurse and I, having caught the eye of a very attractive young concept walking up the aisle, lost the rest of his talk. All in all, it was a most interesting evening.

by John Messer-

William Buckley, Jrs.' National Review is a bimonthly magazine which sets out to spread conservative ideas, but does it really do this? The cover of the periodical says; A Journal of Fact and Opinion. It seems to manifest a vast amount of opinion but very little fact.

This magazine sets forth no theories or policies. It only criticizes and its criticism for the most part is not constructive. It seems that when a magazine, which has for its purpose to promote a cause, criticizes without offering a solution of some sort it should not criticize.

The duty of a newspaper is to report the news and the duty of journals or periodicals is to formulate ideas and set policy which they feel will be in the best interest of the country. No doubt National Review thinks its cause to be in the best interest of the nation but it is difficult to establish what kind of policy they are trying to set forth.

Looking at National Review's staff and some of its contributors, we see former liberals, Trotskyites and Socialists. Of course a mans' past is no reflection on the magazine or what it is trying to foster, but it is interesting to note what some of National Review's staff "once" believed.

When reading National Review, one does not have to wholly agree with it nor does one have to adhere to its criticism, but most frustrating to a conservative is National Review's attempt to set forth a so-called conservative policy.

Knights To Face Providence Five Saturday

MIKE FALLON

During the past five years the Knights of the hardwood have literally waltzed, birkey trotted or taffy apple tangoed to the mythical Vermont state championship but this year they can expect a little harassment by Vermont and the surprising Norwich Cadets.

Although 2-6 isn't the most enviable record in New England Naismith circles, the Cats proved to be ulcer agitaters Monday night when they sent Coach Matt Zunic and the UMass Redmen to the aspirin closet post haste, after a five minute overtime skit. It was merely a case of the Cats putting two halves together with some Becton glue. Vermont had played convincingly until the coffee break against Rhody and UConn but lasted the duration against the Amherst five.

"Fuzzy" Evans who came so close to "upsetting" the Knights last year only to bow 63-60 in an overtime session will be firing for the big win this year especially when he knows that UMass tipped Colby by one digit and we bowed by a baker's dozen Brandeis and Plattsburgh State are the only foes which have defeated Norwich. Norwich reportedly had a bad night against both but "Greg' McCanna has had so few good nights in the past that a bad night is just an old memory. The secret to Norwich success is the shooting and rebounding of a prolific guard dubbed Kasheta. Only last week his 23 points per game ranked 23rd among the nation's small college scorers. He seems to get quite a bit of help from Menke, Potvin and De-Elia. The Keedets came close to dismounting the Knights last year and McCanna, like Evans, will be aiming for

Dan Liebowitz of Adelphi was named to the same squad this week after a 35 point effort for the Long Islanders ... Ben Becton of Vermont is the nation's 17th leading rebounder with an average of 18 retrieves per match. Jim Kirkland of Jacksonville is the nation's 16th leading scorer with a 25 point per game average .. Cone of Jacksonville U. is 19th among field goal percentage leaders having hit on .585 of his tosses ... Belmont Abbey is 19th (59.9) and LeMoyne is 29th (61.1) among the nation's defensive leaders ...
